	The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century)

1. Course outline

- Use the following table to organize the topics to be taught in the course. If you need to include topics that cover other requirements you have to teach (for example, national syllabus), make sure that you do so in an integrated way, but also differentiate them using italics. Add as many rows as you need.

- This document should not be a day-by-day accounting of each unit. It is an outline showing how you will distribute the topics and the time to ensure that students are prepared to comply with the requirements of the subject
- This outline should show how you will develop the teaching of the subject. It should reflect the individual nature of the course in your classroom and should not just be a “copy and paste” from the subject guide.
- If you will teach both higher and standard level, make sure that this is clearly identified in your outline.

	Topic/unit (as identified in the IB subject guide) State the topics/units in the order you are planning to teach them.	Contents	Allocated time		Assessment instruments to be used	Resources List the main resources to be used, including information technology if applicable.

2. IB internal assessment requirement to be completed during the course

Briefly explain how and when you will work on it. Include the date when you will first introduce the internal assessment requirement, when the internal assessment requirement will be due and how students will be prepared to do it.

We introduce the internal assessment to students in the middle of March of their first year with some guidance on how to formulate suitable IA topics and research questions. Students are required to submit a formal proposal to the teacher for their chosen topic, in which they outline their topic, along with 3 suitable resources for research. This should be completed by the end of April. The first draft of the paper will be due by the middle of May, in which students will workshop and peer-review their essays. The second draft of their essays are due by the end of August. Their final work will be completed by the end of September.

3. Links to TOK

You are expected to explore links between the topics of your subject and TOK. As an example of how you would do this, choose one topic from your course outline that would allow your students to make links with TOK. Describe how you would plan the lesson.

Topic	Link with TOK (including description of lesson plan)
The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century)	When looking at the link of TOK and the topic of The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century), we see many opportunities for students to engage with and challenge themselves through the promotion of TOK within the lesson. Specifically, one of the lessons which will be taught will be titled, “The Cold War: What if the Berlin Wall did not fall?” In this particular lesson, students will be engaging in TOK in its entirety, as they critically analyse and assess the ramifications of a different outcome in history. In doing so, the goal of the lesson is to have students question, dispute, and discuss the varying perspectives of the Cold War, and how a simple change of an event could have impacted them in the present day. The rough outline of the lesson is as follows: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Bell Ringer: Students discuss political cartoons which showcase both the American and Soviet perspective on the Cold War, answering the question “How does where you live impact your perspective on war?” 2. Group Work: Students will be given various primary documents about the fall of the Berlin Wall, in which they will work in groups to discuss and answer questions on the documents, particularly asking themselves, “Is there an alternate explanation?” Students will also discuss the validity of their evidence which they use. 3. Class Debate: Students will debate the ramifications of the fall of the Berlin Wall, and the ramifications if it did not fall. In doing so, students will be looking into the “point” of the subject of history, while also looking at alternative explanations/scenarios.

4. Approaches to learning

Every IB course should contribute to the development of students’ approaches to learning skills. As an example of how you would do this, choose one topic from your outline that would allow your students to specifically develop one or more of these skill categories (thinking, communication, social, self-management or research).

Topic	Contribution to the development of students’ approaches to learning skills (including one or more skill category)
Causes and effects of 20th-century wars	Thinking: Students will engage in higher levels of thinking ATL skills throughout their entire History course, as they will develop and maintain critical thinking skills through class discussion, debate, research, in-class projects, analysis of primary and secondary sources, and interpretation of historical events. Students will engage in creative thinking skills as well, through in-class projects, creation of presentations, analysis of varying perspectives, and class discussions. Communication: Students will engage in a variety of communication skills within this course, as classes will be student-centred and run in a flipped manner. In doing so, students will be required to come to their lesson prepared to discuss the material, essentially allowing them to focus on developing their own perspectives and ideas surrounding the topics. This will increase student communication in the verbal form.

	Communication will also be developed through written form, for example, in-class writing prompts, notes, and essays. Some specific examples of communication within the course include, but are not limited to: Class discussion, partner discussions, socratic seminars, KWL charts, 20 questions, presentations, etc. Research: Students will engage in constant research throughout this class and topic, as they will use primary and secondary documents to support their ideas and perspectives. Students will learn the importance of valid and qualified research, and how to properly obtain it. During this topic, students will conduct a research project in which they research and choose one person from a war which we have studied, and create a biography on them which they will present to the class. In doing so, students will work on both independent and group research, while also using primary and secondary sources.

5. International mindedness

Every IB course should contribute to the development of international-mindedness in students. As an example of how you would do this, choose one topic from your outline that would allow your students to analyse it from different cultural perspectives. Briefly explain the reason for your choice and what resources you will use to achieve this goal.

Topic	Contribution to the development of international mindedness (including resources you will use)
The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century)	Within the topic of The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century), students will have the opportunity to look at the two varying perspectives of the Cold War, through the eyes of the Americans and the eyes of the Soviets. In one particular lesson, titled "Who is right?: The Varying Perspectives of the Cold War " students will compare and contrast the American and Soviet point of view on the Cold War, including the social, economic, and political consequences to their countries and the world if the other was to prevail. Students will analyse the two different cultural perspectives from viewpoints of each countries' leaders, military leaders, and social classes. In doing so, students will not only be comparing and contrasting the two countries' perspectives, but also the varying perspectives of the countries' citizens themselves. The outline of the lesson is as follows: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Bell Ringer: Watching and discussing President Reagan's "Tear Down the Wall Speech" and comparing it to 2. Class Discussion on who had more to gain and lose from the Cold War 3. Read articles on American and Soviet perspective on Cold War 4. Group Research: Soviet Union vs. America—students will research the president, top military leaders, and social class (provided by teacher) from their assigned country. Resources which will be used: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. 155185.pdf (wilsoncenter.org) Speech by Mr. Khrushchev, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, at the 869th Plenary Meeting of the 15th Session of the United Nations General Assembly 2. "Tear Down This Wall" National Archives "Tear Down the Wall" Speech by Ronald Reagan 3. Textbook "Causes and Effects of 20th Century Wars": Hodder Education IB Diploma resources 4. Historical analysis of the Cold War eHISTORY (osu.edu) 5. Comparative perspectives on the Cold War : national and sub-national approaches (ka.edu.pl)

6. Development of the IB learner profile

Through the course it is also expected that students will develop the attributes of the IB learner profile. As an example of how you would do this, choose one topic from your course outline and explain how the contents and related skills would pursue the development of any attribute(s) of the IB learner profile that you will identify.

Topic	Contribution to the development of the attribute(s) of the IB learner profile
The Cold War: superpower tensions and rivalries (20th century)	Throughout this unit, students will develop many of their IB Learner Profile attributes. As a class, we will focus on thinkers, inquiries, open-mindedness, and reflection. In this unit, students will be engaging with multiple perspectives, higher levels of critical and creative thinking, varying ideas and opinions, and reflecting on how their lives would be different if the Cold War did not occur/end how it did. Students will be engaged in the following, which help to develop the aforementioned IB Learner Profiles: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. Class Discussion/debates2. Socratic Seminars3. Group and Individual research and project-based learning4. Class Notes5. Comparing and Contrasting multiple perspectives on historical events6. Crossover Learning7. Analysis of primary and secondary sources8. Context-based learning

7. Resources

Are instructional materials and other resources available in sufficient quality, quantity and variety to give effective support to the aims and methods of the courses? Will students have access to resources beyond the ones available at school? Briefly describe what plans are in place if changes are needed.

Instructional materials and other resources are available in the school library for the students, including the textbooks. Copies are made for students if they need them. The school library boasts a large quantity of high quality materials and resources for the students to use throughout the course, as well as a computer lab with access to online research opportunities.

Students have plenty of opportunities to access resources beyond the school as well, including a public library system and collegiate library system within Bratislava. If students have a library card, (which they will be required to obtain) they will have unlimited access to the resources within the library systems of both the Bratislava public libraries (which consist of 7+ libraries within a 20 mile radius of the school) and The University of Bratislava library.

If necessary, the school has allocated within its budget the ability to purchase more materials and resources.
